

Mrs. Sophie Binns, President Young People's Christian Temperance Union, Fruitvale, Bal., Cured of Congestion and Inflammation of the Ovaries by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Eighteen months ago I was a pretty young woman. I had felt for some months that I gradually grew weaker, but finally I had such severe pains I could hardly stand. I had taken cold during menstruation and this developed into congestion of the ovaries and inflammation, and I could not bear to walk or stand on my feet. The doctor recommended an operation which I would not hear of. One of my friends advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I gave it a trial. Can you imagine my feeling when within two months I felt considerably better, my general health was improved, and my pains had entirely disappeared. I kept taking it six weeks more and am now enjoying the best of health, thanks to you. Yours truly, MRS. SOPHIE BINNS."

Farm Topics

Keep the Cow From Mourning.
As soon as the calf is born put it in a box with plenty of bedding, and feed with its mother's milk while warm from the cow for a week at least. Then it will thrive and grow fat on good, sweet, skimmed milk with a little linseed meal or ground oats added and increased gradually. When the time comes to take away the calf, there is no mourning on the part of either cow or calf. I have always followed keeping the calves away from the cows, and am not bothered with cows holding up their milk for the calves. I find that heifers are easiest broken with the calves away.—E. L. H., in New York Tribune.

Chopped Hay For Cattle.
I have not just at hand figures to prove the value of chopping the hay for cattle feeding, but I know that careful experimentation has proved that the best economic results have been obtained by feeding the hay chopped. Very many of the owners of extensive herds in the State chop the hay for feeding. All animals eat the chopped feed clean, thereby making a very considerable saving. The hay was always chopped for the stock on my father's California farm, even as far back as forty-two or forty-three years ago. From the experience that came with this practice I have since been an advocate of chopping the hay for stock feeding.—President D. T. Fowler, in Fruit World.

How Not to Do It.
Nearly every colt, when driven away from home, will shy and scare more or less at objects along the roadside. After he has been driven a few times the common practice is to strike him with the whip every time he does this. It is provoking to feed a horse hay three times a day and then see him scare at a little pile of hay in the road. The first thing that comes in the mind is to give him a cut with the whip. Nothing worse than this could be done. The next time he will not only be afraid of the object but of the whip also, and by a little training in this way he will soon be confirmed in the habit of shying and scaring at nearly everything he sees. First the tendency, then the habit, is the law of nature, and when the pile of hay or rock, or whatever startles, is connected with the whip, as it soon will be, the habit is fixed for life. You cannot lick horses into good habits; you can establish vices very easily by blows.—Maine Farmer.

Sizing Up the Chicks.
The cut shows a framework low at one end and much higher at the other, under which chickens of all ages and sizes can be fed, and each one allowed to eat in peace. All sizes of chicks fed together in an open space results in the big ones trampling on the smaller ones, and robbing them of their share. Some such arrangement as that shown is absolutely essential where chickens have to be hatched during a considerable space of time in the spring. An ideal condition is to have the chicks all early and all of a size, but few can accomplish this desirable end.—New England Homestead.

The Value of Crop Rotation.
All soils contain fertility to a certain degree, and in even the most fertile soils there are dominant or insoluble substances, varying in composition, but which cannot be appropriated by some crops, though easily available for others, but if such elements are not appropriated by the crop occupying the ground they are gradually being reduced or being changed in composition so as to be put in condition for the succeeding crop; hence rotation, therefore, not only prevents the loss of certain substances in the soil, but assists in converting the locked-up elements of the soil into available plant foods. In this country no system of rotation is deemed complete without clover, while in England turnips and sheep are considered essential to success. Rotation largely depends upon the soil and its condition, but all soils are subject to mechanical changes. It has been demonstrated that green crops are valuable in restoring fertility, and lime has been found a valuable assistant, especially in preparing the soil for the work of bacteria, by neutralizing the acidity, but the best results are obtained by not only varying the crops grown, but also by studying the characteristics of the soil.—Philadelphia Record.
